

global economic governance, Brookings Institution, global governance, population, emerging market economies, representative forum, economic forces, China, the world's population, international economic, POLICY BRIEF, economic growth, industrial countries, finance ministers, Policy Briefs, largest economies in the world, GLOBAL MAJORITY, developing countries, industrialized countries, Nicholas R. Lardy, Johannes F. Linn, Barbara Kotschwar, Helmut Schmidt, Gross Domestic Product, World Bank, institutions, Asian financial crisis, EMEs, global conversations, Russia crisis, international financial system, International Monetary Fund, Global Development, demographic trends, international financial institutions, international organization, global institutions, global economy, Integrating China into the Global Economy, Caio Koch-Weser, Fred Bergsten, heads of state, policy issues, global forum, Alice M. Rivlin, Robert E. Litan, leadership style, Roger G. Noll, Richard J. Herring, unilateralism, Brookings Trade Forum, Dani Rodrik, Steven Radelet, the United States, Carol Graham, Gayle Smith, Nigel Purvis, Miguel Rodriguez Mendoza, Colin Bradford, Journal of the Latin American and Caribbean Economic Association Andres Velasco, global economic issues, Susan M. Collins, Brookings Resources, Lael Brainard, Ralph C. Bryant

Global Economic Governance at a Crossroads: Replacing the G-7 with the G-20