

Transvaal, South Africa, Witwatersrand, Milner, Godfrey Lagden, London, Native Labour, South African, Lord Milner, Peter Abrahams, Michel Foucault, Joseph Chamberlain, Native Affairs, South African state, British imperialism, Milner Papers, Lord Kitchener, O'Brien Milner, political power, Headlam Milner Papers, British Expeditionary Force, Marlowe Milner, British concentration camps, Faber and Faber, Cecil John Rhodes, Lady Milner, Witwatersrand Native Labour Association, labour contract, native, administration, African workers, Registry Office, Labour Districts, Transvaal Republic, initial registration, Native Affairs Department, David Burton, the President of the Chamber of Mines at Milner, labour administration, Percy Fitzpatrick, British Post Office, Native Administration, Lord Alfred Milner

Lord Milner's Registry: the origins of South African exceptionalism